FANCY A BOG SET?

BOX set fans stream their favourite TV shows on the loo, at parties and even at funerals, researchers found.

A study revealed almost 20 per cent have watched the latest episodes of their favourite show from the loo.

One in 50 claimed to have tuned in at the burial or cremation of a loved one. Almost one in five have caught up with an episode while at work.

Other telly addicts admitted streaming in libraries, while walking the dog and on their commute to work, with 42 per cent saying it was the only time they could catch their favourite show, the Sky Mobile study said.

Dead rude! Boxset fans even watch at funerals

NOT even death can stop boxset addicts getting their fix, it seems.

One in 50 viewers has used a phone or tablet to discreetly catch up on their favourite show while at a funeral, a poll by Sky Mobile reveals.

A fifth have watched episodes at work or on the loo. And one in 20 has slipped off at a party as they find TV dramas more entertaining than their friends.

Sky Mobile director Sophia Ahmad said: 'We are a nation of avid TV fans, but the way we view our favourite shows has changed drastically over the last decade.'

Dead wrong: Boxset fans admit streaming at funerals

GEMMA FRANCIS

DEVOTED boxset fans admit streaming their favourite shows in bizarre places including on the toilet, at parties – and even at funerals.

A detailed study found almost 20 per cent have watched the latest episode from the loo, while one in 50 even claimed they tuned in at the burial or cremation of a loved one.

Almost one in five have caught up with the latest episode at work, while more than one in 20 have streamed a show during an office “away day”.

A similar number have even slipped away at a party.

Others telly addicts admitted streaming programmes in libraries, while walking the dog and on their commute to work, with 42% of hard-working Britons saying that was the only time they could catch their favourite show.

Researchers also found 71% of streaming fans said it’s important for them to keep up to date.

And three-quarters said they feel under pressure to stream on the go to avoid hearing any unwanted spoilers if they leave it to catch up later.

As a result, three in 10 regularly stream while on holiday, with one in 10 even catching up on the beach.

These quirky viewing habits emerged in a study by Sky Mobile to launch Watch, which gives its users unlimited Sky TV streaming without having to use their data allowance.

To celebrate the launch Sky gave a handful of TV lovers the chance to stream their favourite shows in the locations from their beloved programmes.

Game of Thrones fan Rivka Churney watched the fantasy hit from Northern Ireland’s Castle Ward, the location for Winterfell – the home of House Stark – as well as the Dark Hedges, the atmospheric tunnel of trees used for The King’s Road in the show.

Sophia Ahmad, director of Sky

Mobile, said: “We are a nation of avid TV fans, but the way we view our favourite shows has changed drastically over the last decade, thanks to data allowances on our phone and tablets.

“Far from having to wait until we get home after a long day at work to catch up on our favourite box set, we can now watch it on the go thanks to our mobiles and tablets.

“This really opens up where we can watch the shows but this also means we are relying more than ever on our mobile phone data, so we have updated Watch to allow our customers to watch what they love without using all of their data.”

Sky Mobile has announced a new version of its Watch offer, that gives customers unlimited streaming on any Sky app without using a single MB of their data allowance.

Streaming apps like Sky Go allow users to watch Sky movies, TV shows and sports matches on the go, but they can consume huge amounts of data.

For example, one episode of Game of Thrones will eat through 1.4GB of data, while a full Premier League match will use 2.7 GB.

Sky Mobile's new Watch service lets you stream Game of Thrones without affecting your data

Jeff Parsons Friday 8 Mar 2019 2:15 pm

Sky Mobile has announced a new streaming feature for its customers that means they can watch content on their phones without affecting their data allowance.

It's called Watch and it applies to all the Sky apps, including Sky Sports, Sky News, Sky Go and Sky Q.

If you're a subscriber and a Sky Mobile customer you can enjoy an entire football match or episode of Game of Thrones without affecting your bill. That's pretty useful – especially if you're locked in to Sky's £6 a month plan, which only affords you 1GB of data.

Stream no matter where you are without using up your data

Image credit: Sky Mobile

The biggest drain to your monthly data limit on a phone contract is always the streaming, but luckily for Sky Mobile users that may not be such a problem any more.

As of today, Sky Mobile is launching a new Sky Watch proposition, offering up unlimited streaming away from Wi-Fi on all of its apps (such as Sky Go) without using any of your data. That means hours (and hours) of data-free Sky Sports, Sky Kids, Sky Cinema and all of the other movie and TV services it has.

Watch will be available to all Sky Mobile customers, although what you can stream depends on what you are already subscribed to. If you don't have any Sky TV subscriptions, you won't suddenly be able to watch that. But you will still have access to free streaming of services such as Sky News or the classic Freeview channels.

Sky Mobile now offers unlimited streaming on Sky apps

Sky Mobile has announced that it is now offering unlimited streaming of TV shows and movies on its Sky range of apps. If you watch a TV show or movie on a Sky app on your Sky Mobile device it will not count to your data allowance.

This means that you can use the Sky Go, Sky Kids, Sky Sports and Sky Cinema apps on your smartphone or tablet on Sky Mobile without using any data.

Watch is available to all Sky Mobile customers, although what you can access will depend on your Sky TV subscription. If you don't have a TV package, you can still benefit from streaming Sky apps that don't require a subscription without using your data, such as Sky News.

Sophia Ahmad, Director of Sky Mobile, comments "We launched Sky Mobile to connect our customers to more of what they love. Streaming films and TV shows on-the-go is now one of the most popular ways to pass time while travelling or commuting – and our new Watch offer makes it easier for our customers to stay up to date with the unmissable must-watch television, from Game of Thrones to F1 races, that we know our customers love."

Sky Mobile Customers Can Now Stream TV Without Using Data

By Holly Brockwell on 08 Mar 2019 at 10:00AM

It might not be one of the 'big four' networks in the UK, but Sky Mobile customers are probably feeling quite smug about their choice now. The network has just upgraded its Sky Watch offer, now a major perk whereby you can stream TV, film and sports on your mobile connection without using any of your data.

The deal includes all Sky apps (Sky Go, Sky Kids, Sky Sports and Sky Cinema) and all Sky Mobile customers are automatically included as long as they've got 50MB of data allowance (which is bugger all, so if you've got less than that, have a word with yourself).

There are no data caps on Sky Watch (though we wouldn't be surprised if there's a fair use thing) and you can even use it in the EU without using up data. Considering how much checking your email costs on holiday on some contracts, that's a pretty sweet deal.

For comparison, here's how much data you'd be using otherwise:

- An episode of Game of Thrones (63 mins): 1.4 GB

New Sky Mobile Watch: unlimited streaming without using your mobile data

By Becky Roberts 3 days ago News

Watch what you want without eating into your mobile data

Sky has announced a new version of its Sky Mobile Watch feature, which now gives Sky Mobile customers unlimited streaming of content on any Sky app (including Sky Go, Sky Kids, Sky Sports and Sky Cinema) without eating into any of their mobile data allowance.

Sky customers can stream anything that comes under their subscription through the Sky mobile apps in the UK and the EU. Previously, Watch only allowed Sky users to download shows to a smartphone or tablet to watch offline.

Sky customers without a TV package subscription can still benefit, with them able to stream Sky content that doesn't require a subscription, such as Sky News.

Sky says an hour-long episode of Game of Thrones equates to 1.4GB, which would typically cost just under £15 in data (based on the figures by Future Digital Media that 1GB of data is valued at £9.27).

So essentially, avid smartphone streamers of Sky content who normally rack up data usage outside of their allowance should now save a lot of money.

Content streaming has become ubiquitous but is notorious for causing data overages much to the chagrin of consumers, so Sky Mobile has announced a new initiative to let subscribers stream all they want without restriction.

Customers can now access all of their favorite shows and movies via the company's dedicated apps whenever they want without any of the data used counting towards their monthly allowance. This functionality works in tandem with the users Sky TV subscription, but those without a TV plan can still access the unlimited streaming via Sky News to make it accessible for all.

Commenting on the new streaming initiative, Director of Sky Mobile Sophia Ahmad said, "We launched Sky Mobile to connect our customers to more of what they love. Streaming films and TV shows on-the-go is now one of the most popular ways to pass time while traveling or commuting – and our new Watch offer makes it easier for our customers to stay up to date with the unmissable must-watch television, from Game of Thrones to F1 races, that we know our customers love."

Sky Mobile adds unlimited streaming to Watch offering

Sunday 10 March 2019 | 20:54 CET | News

UK MVNO Sky Mobile has announced a version of its Watch offering, giving customers unlimited streaming on any Sky app, including Sky Go, Sky Cinema, Sky Sports and Sky Kids, without using any of their data allowance.

The new Watch feature allows customers to stream TV shows, films and sports matches live through Sky apps in the UK and EU without using their data. This expands the existing Watch offering which allows customers to download shows to their mobile to watch offline via Sky Go Extra.

Watch is available to all Sky Mobile customers, with content access depending on their Sky TV subscription. Customers without a TV package can still use streaming apps that don't need a subscription without using their data, such as Sky News. Watch is also available on any data package, including the new Samsung S10 range which is available from GBP 39 per month with 1GB data and unlimited calls/texts on a Swap24 contract.

Sky reveals weirdest places people have streamed TV boxsets

The 20 weirdest places people have streamed favourite shows (including funerals)

Devoted boxset fans admit streaming their favourite shows in bizarre places including on the toilet, at parties - and even at funerals.

A detailed study found almost 20 per cent have watched the latest episode from the loo, while one in 50 even claimed they tuned in at the burial or cremation of a loved one.

Almost one in five have caught up with the latest episode at work, while more than one in 20 have streamed a show during an office 'away day'.

A similar number have even slipped away at a party to get their boxset fix.

Sky Mobile extends streaming offer

MARCH 10, 2019 16:43 EUROPE/LONDON BY JULIAN CLOVER

Sky Mobile has announced a new version of its Watch proposition that allows customers unlimited streaming from any Sky app. This includes Sky Go, Sky Kids, Sky Sports and Sky Cinema.

Previously customers were able to use Sky Go Extra to watch Sky content offline, but this is the first time it has been able to stream on the go, without the customer eating into their data allowance.

Sophia Ahmad, Director of Sky Mobile, said: "We launched Sky Mobile to connect our customers to more of what they love. Streaming films and TV shows on-the-go is now one of the most popular ways to pass time while travelling or commuting – and our new Watch offer makes it easier for our customers to stay up to date with the unmissable must-watch television, from Game of Thrones to F1 races, that we know our customers love."

Watch is available to all Sky Mobile customers, though the precise nature of the content depends on which Sky package the customer has signed up to.

Sky Mobile launches unlimited streaming with Watch

WEBWIRE – Friday, March 8, 2019

Sky Mobile announces a new version of its Watch offer, giving customers unlimited streaming on any Sky app, such as Sky Go, Sky Kids, Sky Sports and Sky Cinema, without using a single MB of their data allowance.

With Watch, Sky customers can stream everything from movies and TV shows to unmissable sports matches live through the Sky apps anywhere in the UK and the EU, without using any data. The new feature builds on the existing Watch offering, where you can download shows to your mobile to watch offline with Sky Go Extra, however this is the first time that you'll be able to stream wherever you are, on-the-go, without using your data allowance.

Watch is available to all Sky Mobile customers, although what you can access will depend on your Sky TV subscription. If you don't have a TV package, you can still benefit from streaming Sky apps that don't require a subscription without using your data., such as Sky News.

It's also available on any data package, including the new Samsung S10 range, which is available from today from just £39 per month with 1GB data and unlimited calls and texts on a Swap24 plan .

Sophia Ahmad, Director of Sky Mobile, comments "We launched Sky Mobile to connect our customers to more of what they love. Streaming films and TV shows on-the-go is now one of the most popular ways to pass time while travelling or commuting – and our new Watch offer makes it easier for our customers to stay up to date with the unmissable must-watch television, from Game of Thrones to F1 races, that we know our customers love."

Here's how much data you could save to Watch some of the most popular movies, shows and matches on Sky :

- An episode of Game of Thrones (63 mins): 1.4 GB
- A full Premiere League match (120 mins): 2.7 GB
- One episode of Friends (23 mins): 500 MB
- A full-length film, e.g. Love Simon: (110 mins): 2.5GB
- A full F1 race (125 mins): 2.9GB

The launch of Watch is Sky's latest shake up of the UK mobile market. Other features include Roll, the first

Sky Mobile offer unlimited streaming from all Sky apps

Leigh Geary | March 11, 2019

Do you use Sky Go? Or Sky Sports? Perhaps Sky Cinema or Sky Kids? If you do, then you'll know that streaming all the great football and TV content can impact your data allowance.

However, if you're a Sky Mobile customer then you can use the new "Watch" feature to stream as much as you want with these apps without impacting your data allowance. All Sky Mobile customers are automatically eligible and you can use the service across the UK and EU.

Sky is an MVNO sitting on the O2 network and are selling the Galaxy S10 right now. There are no data usage caps and unused data is automatically rolled into your Sky Piggybank each month. You can keep that for up to three years or cash it in for rewards.

The new offer provides such unlimited access on any Sky app, such as Sky Go, Sky Kids, Sky Sports and Sky Cinema meaning that viewers can stream content ranging from films and TV shows to live sports anywhere in the UK and the EU without using any data. The new feature builds on the existing Watch offering, where viewers could download shows to their mobile device to watch offline with Sky Go Extra.

Watch is available to all Sky Mobile customers, although access will depend on an individual's Sky TV subscription. Other features include Roll, the first UK data rollover service available to all customers, where all unused monthly data is automatically rolled over and made available for three years.

"We launched Sky Mobile to connect our customers to more of what they love," said Sophia Ahmad, director of Sky Mobile. "Streaming films and TV shows on-the-go is now one of the most popular ways to pass time while travelling or commuting – and our new Watch offer makes it easier for our customers to stay up to date with the unmissable must-watch television, from Game of Thrones to Formula 1 races, that we know our customers love."

Customers of Sky's (Sky Broadband, Sky TV etc.) 4G mobile plans can already benefit from things like data roll-over (unused data is saved for future usage or cashed in) and now they've upgraded their Sky Watch feature to add unlimited video streaming via any Sky app (i.e. without using up your mobile data allowance).

In other words users of Sky Mobile will be able to stream as much TV, Sport or Movie content as they like while using either the Sky Go, Sky Kids, Sky Sports or Sky Cinema app on their Smartphones. Previously the Sky Watch feature only allowed customers to download shows to their mobile in order to watch then off-line with Sky Go Extra.

Sky Watch is available to all Sky Mobile customers, although what you can access will of course depend upon whether you have a Sky TV subscription. However it's worth noting that Sky News allows even non-Sky TV customers to stream news content/video without using up their data. Otherwise Sky Watch is available on all of the Sky Mobile plans.

Sophia Ahmad, Director of Sky Mobile, said:

"We launched Sky Mobile to connect our customers to more of what they love. Streaming films and TV shows on-the-go is now one of the most popular ways to pass time while travelling or commuting – and our new Watch offer makes it easier for our customers to stay up to date with the unmissable must-watch television, from Game of Thrones to F1 races, that we know our customers love."

On the toilet, at parties – and even at funerals are among the bizarre places boxset fans are streaming their favourite shows, it has emerged.

Researchers who carried out a detailed study found almost one in five have watched the latest episode from the loo, while one in 50 even admitted tuning in at the burial or cremation of a loved one.

Almost one in five have caught up with the latest episode at work, while more than one in 20 have streamed a show during an office 'away day'.

A similar number have even slipped away at a party to get their boxset fix.

Others telly addicts admitted streaming programmes in libraries, while walking the dog and on their commute to work, with 42 per cent of hard-working Brits saying that was the only time they could find to settle down with their favourite show.

Sky offers mobile TV without use of data allowance

Written by DTVE Reporter | 6 days ago

Sky has unveiled a new version of its Watch mobile TV offering, which enables Sky customers to stream content through Sky apps in the UK and EU without using their data allowance.

Building on the existing Sky Watch offering, which enables viewers to download shows to their mobile to watch offline with Sky Go Extra, the new version enables unlimited streaming on any Sky app, such as Sky Go, Sky Kids, Sky Sports and Sky Cinema without using their mobile data allowance.

Watch is available to all Sky Mobile customers. What they can access will depend on their Sky TV subscription. Users without a TV package can still use streaming Sky apps that don't require a subscription without using data, such as Sky News.

Sophia Ahmad, Director of Sky Mobile, said "We launched Sky Mobile to connect our customers to more of what they love. Streaming films and TV shows on-the-go is now one of the most popular ways to pass time while travelling or commuting – and our new Watch offer makes it easier for our customers to stay up to date with the unmissable must-watch television, from Game of Thrones to F1 races, that we know our customers love."

Revealed: The country's strangest streaming habits

1 in 5 Brits admitted to tuning in to their favourite show in the toilet.

By Cormac Connelly-Smith - @cormacsmith

Friday, March 8, 2019

Funerals, toilets and parties are among the places boxset fans have streamed their favourite shows, a new survey has revealed.

One in 50 respondents admitted to tuning in while at the burial or cremation of a loved one, with one Game of Thrones fan admitting they were caught doing so.

One in five fans admitted to have streamed the latest episode of their favourite series on the toilet; the same number as those who tuned in while they should have been working.

Sky Mobile has announced a new streaming feature for its customers that means they can watch content on their phones without affecting their data allowance. It's called Watch and it applies to all the Sky apps, including Sky Sports, Sky News, Sky Go and Sky Q. If you're a subscriber and a Sky Mobile customer you can enjoy an entire football match or episode of Game of Thrones without affecting your bill. That's pretty useful – especially if you're locked in to Sky's £6 a month plan, which only affords you 1GB of data. It's similar to perks offered by other networks. For example, Three lets... Sky Mobile launches Watch streaming plan

sky mobile

Staff Reporter | On 14, Mar 2019

Reading time: 2 mins

Sky is revamping its mobile phone revive for the binge-watching age, with the launch of its new Watch plan, which gives customers unlimited streaming on any Sky app.

With Watch, Sky customers can stream everything from movies and TV shows to unmissable sports matches live anywhere in the UK and the EU, without using any data. The unlimited data usage applies to anything watched on a Sky app, including Sky Go, Sky Kids, Sky Sports and Sky Cinema. An episode of Game of Thrones, for example, could normally use up 1.4 GB, while a full Premier League match could use as much as 2.7 GB.

The new feature builds on the existing Watch offering, where you can download shows to your mobile to watch offline with Sky Go Extra, however this is the first time that you'll be able to stream wherever you are, on-the-go, without using your data allowance.

Watch is available to all Sky Mobile customers, although what you can access will depend on your Sky TV subscription. If you don't have a particular package, you can still benefit from data-free streaming on Sky apps that don't require a subscription, such as Sky News.

Sophia Ahmad, Director of Sky Mobile, comments: "We launched Sky Mobile to connect our customers to

Boxset insanity: Essentially the most uncommon locations individuals have streamed their favorite TV present

March 10, 2019 Brinkwire

On the loo, at parties – and even at funerals are among the bizarre places boxset fans are streaming their favourite shows, it has emerged.

Researchers who carried out a detailed study found almost one in five have watched the latest episode from the loo, while one in 50 even admitted tuning in at the burial or cremation of a loved one.

Almost one in five have caught up with the latest episode at work, while more than one in 20 have streamed a show during an office 'away day'.

A similar number have even slipped away at a party to get their boxset fix.

Others telly addicts admitted streaming programmes in libraries, while walking the dog and on their commute to work, with 42% of hard-working Brits saying that was the only time they could find to settle down with their favourite show.

Researchers also found 71% of streaming fans said it's important for them to keep up to date with their favourite TV shows.

And three quarters said they feel under pressure to stream on the go to avoid hearing any unwanted spoilers if they leave it to catch up later.

As a result, three in 10 regularly stream while on holiday, with one in 10 even catching up on the beach.

These quirky viewing habits emerged in a study by Sky Mobile to launch Watch, which gives its users unlimited Sky TV streaming without having to use their data allowance.

To celebrate the launch Sky gave a handful of TV lovers the chance to stream their favourite shows in actual locations from their beloved programmes.

Sky Cell's new Watch supply enables you to stream Sky content material with out losing knowledge

March 8, 2019 Brinkwire

The biggest drain to your monthly data limit on a phone contract is always the streaming, but luckily for Sky Mobile users that may not be such a problem any more.

As of today, Sky Mobile is launching a new Sky Watch proposition, offering up unlimited streaming away from Wi-Fi on all of its apps (such as Sky Go) without using any of your data. That means hours (and hours) of data-free Sky Sports, Sky Kids, Sky Cinema and all of the other movie and TV services it has.

Watch will be available to all Sky Mobile customers, although what you can stream depends on what you are already subscribed to. If you don't have any Sky TV subscriptions, you won't suddenly be able to watch that. But you will still have access to free streaming of services such as Sky News or the classic Freeview channels.

Sophia Ahmad, Director of Sky Mobile, said: "Streaming films and TV shows on-the-go is now one of the most popular ways to pass time while travelling or commuting – and our new Watch offer makes it easier for our customers to stay up to date with the unmissable must-watch television."

This service is coming just at the right time to watch new episodes of Game of Thrones, catch the end of the Premier League season or just watch the latest and greatest films on Sky Cinema.

Head to Sky Mobile to discover more about this offer and grab a Sky mobile phone deal.

SKY MOBILE LETS YOU STREAM TV ON THE GO WITHOUT EATING INTO YOUR DATA ALLOWANCE

Sky Mobile has announced a new version of its Watch offer, that gives customers unlimited streaming on any Sky app without using a single MB of their data allowance.

Streaming apps like Sky Go allow users to watch Sky movies, TV shows and sports matches on the go, but they can consume huge amounts of data.

For example, one episode of Game of Thrones will eat through 1.4GB of data, while a full Premier League match will use 2.7 GB.

The previous version of Watch let users download shows onto their mobile phones to watch offline with Sky Go Extra.

Researchers also found 71 per cent of streaming fans said it's important for them to keep up to date with their favourite TV shows.

Building on the existing Sky Watch offering, which enables viewers to download shows to their mobile to watch offline with Sky Go Extra, the new version enables unlimited streaming on any Sky app, such as Sky Go, Sky Kids, Sky Sports and Sky Cinema without using their mobile data allowance.

Game of Thrones fan Rivka Churney from London got to go to Castle Ward in Northern Ireland, aka Winterfell, and the Dark Hedges, used as the King's Road. "I am especially excited about the upcoming final series and that I can stream it anytime without using my data - no more fears of plot spoilers".

Sarah Brazier from Bristol also watched Riviera on a yacht in the English Channel (lol), Kevin Stubbs from Warrington watched A Discovery of Witches in the Old Quad and the Bodleian Library at Oxford University, and Geo Craig from Barnet watched a football match while playing a football match (okay.) at Hackney Marshes.

Sky Mobile director Sophia Ahmad (pictured) said the company made a decision to launch Watch after feedback from customers, who wanted wider access to Sky content on their mobiles.

For example, watching an entire F1 race will munch through around 2.9GB of your allowance and an episode of Game of Thrones will eat up 1.4GB.

Sky introduces a new service that can change the way you watch TV

March 8, 2019

Most Sky customers know the company's smartphone apps.

With services like Sky Go, users can track the entire content of the business on the go. Sports and entertainment are available when you are not near your set-top box.

These apps are very popular, but there is a problem if you use them when there is no Wi-Fi connection because they can consume a large amount of 4G data.

For example, if you watch a full F1 race, you will consume around 2.9 GB of your allowance and an episode of Game of Thrones will eat 1.4 GB.

With most smartphone users having contracts with limited data, many are unlikely to fully benefit from the Sky Sky subscription because they are afraid to top up their monthly compensation.

Sky is well aware of this, and the Sky Mobile platform has now launched a service called Watch.

This new package will allow customers to view Sky content such as Sky Go, Sky Kids, Sky Sports and Sky Cinema without the need for data.

Watch is available to all Sky Mobile customers. However, access to it depends on your Sky TV subscription.

If you do not have a TV package, you can still stream Sky apps that do not require subscription without using your data like Sky News.

Sophia Ahmad, Director of Sky Mobile, said of the new service, "We launched Sky Mobile to connect our customers with more of what they love. Streaming movies and watching TV on the go today is one of the most popular ways to spend your time traveling or commuting – and our new Watch offer makes it easy for our customers to stay up to date with unmissable must-have TV stay. From Game of Thrones to F1 races that we know our customers love."

sky We would like to point out that in addition to this new data-free streaming, the mobile service also offers Roll, the first UK data rollover service available to all customers, where all unused monthly data is transferred.

Piggybank Rewards also allows you to exchange rolled data for money against

Sky Mobile launches unlimited streaming

Written by CSI
11/03/19

Sky is enhancing its mobile TV service with an unlimited streaming version of Watch that doesn't eat into user's data allowance.

A new version of the company's Watch offer gives some customers unlimited streaming on any Sky app, such as Sky Go, Sky Kids, Sky Sports and Sky Cinema, without using up their data allowance in the UK and EU. Watch is available to all Sky Mobile customers, although the level of access depends on individual Sky TV subscription.

This is the first time that users will be able to stream on-the-go, without using data allowance, the company said. The new feature builds on the existing Watch offering, where users can download shows to their mobile to watch offline with Sky Go Extra.

Other features include Roll, the first UK data rollover service available to all customers, where all unused monthly data is automatically rolled over and made available for three years.

SKY MOBILE'S NEW WATCH OFFER LETS YOU STREAM SKY CONTENT WITHOUT WASTING DATA

The biggest drain to your monthly data limit on a phone contract is always the streaming, but luckily for Sky Mobile users that may not be such a problem any more.

As of today, Sky Mobile is launching a new Sky Watch proposition, offering up unlimited streaming away from Wi-Fi on all of its apps (such as Sky Go) without using any of your data. That means hours (and hours) of data-free Sky Sports, Sky Kids, Sky Cinema and all of the other movie and TV services it has.

Watch will be available to all Sky Mobile customers, although what you can stream depends on what you are already subscribed to. If you don't have any Sky TV subscriptions, you won't suddenly be able to watch that. But you will still have access to free streaming of services such as Sky News or the classic Freeview channels.

Sophia Ahmad, Director of Sky Mobile, said: "Streaming films and TV shows on-the-go is now one of the most popular ways to pass time while travelling or commuting – and our new Watch offer makes it easier for our customers to stay up to date with the unmissable must-watch television."

This service is coming just at the right time to watch new episodes of Game of Thrones, catch the end of the Premier League season or just watch the latest and greatest films on Sky Cinema.

Head to Sky Mobile to discover more about this offer and grab a Sky mobile phone deal.

Sky is constantly updating and refreshing its Sky Q devices but this latest upgrade could be one of its most important in years.

The satellite TV firm has just announced that it is adding a dedicated Kids Safe Mode on Sky Q which will stop younger viewers accessing any programmes that are not suitable for them.

Once activated, via a pin code, it will allow parents to lock their Sky Q box in the Kids section.

Sky launches new service that could change the way you watch TV

March 8, 2019

Most Sky customers will be well aware of the firm's smartphone apps.

Services such as Sky Go allow users to watch all of the firm's content whilst on the move with sports and entertainment all available when away from your main set-top box.

These apps are hugely popular but there is a problem if you use them when not connected to Wi-Fi as they can consume a huge amount of 4G data.

For example, watching an entire F1 race will munch through around 2.9GB of your allowance and an episode of Game of Thrones will eat up 1.4GB.

With most smartphone users having contracts with limited data, it's unlikely many are getting the full potential of their Sky subscription in fear of eating up their monthly allowance.

Sky is clearly aware of this and it's Sky Mobile platform has now launched a service called Watch.

This new bundle offers customers the chance to watch Sky content, such as Sky Go, Sky Kids, Sky Sports and Sky Cinema, without using any of their data allowances.

Watch is available to all Sky Mobile customers, although what you can access will depend on your Sky TV subscription.

If you don't have a TV package, you can still benefit from streaming Sky apps that don't require a subscription without using your data, such as Sky News.

Speaking about the new service, Sophia Ahmad, Director of Sky Mobile, said: "We launched Sky Mobile to connect our customers to more of what they love. Streaming films and TV shows on-the-go is now one of the most popular ways to pass time while travelling or commuting – and our new Watch offer

March 8, 2019

Sky Mobile has announced a new streaming feature for its customers that means they can watch content on their phones without affecting their data allowance.

It's called Watch and it applies to all the Sky apps, including Sky Sports, Sky News, Sky Go and Sky Q.

If you're a subscriber and a Sky Mobile customer you can enjoy an entire football match or episode of Game of Thrones without affecting your bill. That's pretty useful – especially if you're locked in to Sky's £6 a month plan, which only affords you 1GB of data.

Sky has launched a new service called Watch

It's similar to perks offered by other networks. For example, Three lets users stream content through apps like Netflix and Deezer without affecting their data allowance if they're on one of the company's 'Go Binge' contracts.

Sophia Ahmad, director of Sky Mobile, said: 'We launched Sky Mobile to connect our customers to more of what they love. Streaming films and TV shows on-the-go is now one of the most popular ways to pass time while travelling or commuting – and our new Watch offer makes it easier for our customers to stay up to date with the unmissable must-watch television, from Game of Thrones to F1 races, that we know our customers love.'

Sky TV update is one of its most important in years and here's what's new

March 14, 2019

Sky is constantly updating and refreshing its Sky Q devices but this latest upgrade could be one of its most important in years.

The satellite TV firm has just announced that it is adding a dedicated Kids Safe Mode on Sky Q which will stop younger viewers accessing any programmes that are not suitable for them.

Once activated, via a pin code, it will allow parents to lock their Sky Q box in the Kids section.

All non-kids' content including live TV channels, recordings, on-demand shows and even apps that feature unsuitable content will then be blocked until the mode is deactivated.

Speaking about the update, Stephen van Rooyen, Chief Executive UK & Ireland commented: "At Sky, we go further than anyone else to ensure we put families first when developing our services.

"Sky Q's new Kids Safe Mode is a super simple way for parents to have ultimate peace of mind when their children are watching TV."

Kids Safe Mode will also be joined by a new parents guide set to launch later this year from Sky and Common Sense Media to help parents make more informed choices about what their children watch.

This along with Sky's existing family-friendly features will give customers access to the most comprehensive protection across TV and online.

Kids Safe Mode will roll out to Sky Q customers from this spring.

The news of this upgrade comes as Sky recently added Netflix to its service which now allows customers to access this streaming service straight from their set-top box.

The firm has also teased more new features which could arrive later this year including improved voice search which could allow customers to control all aspects of their viewing by simply speaking into their remote control.

Another recent update is also allowing customers to watch Sky on the move without it eating into their monthly data package.

Coming via Sky Mobile, this new plan offers unlimited data when watching content on apps such as Sky Go, Sky Kids and Sky Sports.

Sky is keen to point out that along with this new data free streaming its Mobile service also offers Roll, the first UK data rollover service available to all customers, where all unused monthly data is You can also exchange rolled data for money off Sky Mobile products through the Piggybank Rewards programme.

Although this new plan will be good for Sky customers it's worth remembering that other operators offer similar bundles

Sky Mobile lets you stream TV on the go without eating into your data allowance

by satoshi March 8, 2019

SHARE 0

Sky Mobile has announced a new version of its Watch offer, that gives customers unlimited streaming on any Sky app without using a single MB of their data allowance.

Streaming apps like Sky Go allow users to watch Sky movies, TV shows and sports matches on the go, but they can consume huge amounts of data.

For example, one episode of Game of Thrones will eat through 1.4GB of data, while a full Premier League match will use 2.7 GB.

The previous version of Watch let users download shows onto their mobile phones to watch offline with Sky Go Extra.

However, this is the first time that customers will be able to stream shows wherever they are, without using their data allowance.

The offer covers streaming on any Sky app - including Sky Go, Sky Kids, Sky Sports and Sky Cinema - and applies anywhere in the UK and the EU, subject to network coverage.

However, what customers can access will depend on their Sky TV subscription.

If you don't have a Sky TV package, you can still use Sky streaming apps that don't require a subscription without using your data, such as Sky News.

"Streaming films and TV shows on-the-go is now one of the most popular ways to pass time while travelling or commuting," said Sophia Ahmad, Director of Sky Mobile.

"Our new Watch offer makes it easier for our customers to stay up to date with the unmissable must-watch television, from Game of Thrones to F1 races."

The new service is good news for Sky Mobile customers, but Sky isn't the only mobile operator to offer this kind of deal.

For example, Three Mobile has an offer called Go Binge that lets customers with plans above 12GB get data-free streaming from apps including Netflix, TV Player, Snapchat, Apple Music and Deezer.

On the toilet, at parties – and even at funerals are among the bizarre places boxset fans are streaming their favourite shows, it has emerged.

Researchers who carried out a detailed study found almost one in five have watched the latest episode from the loo, while one in 50 even admitted tuning in at the burial or cremation of a loved one.

Almost one in five have caught up with the latest episode at work, while more than one in 20 have streamed a show during an office 'away day'.

A similar number have even slipped away at a party to get their boxset fix.

Others telly addicts admitted streaming programmes in libraries, while walking the dog and on their commute to work, with 42 per cent of hard-working Brits saying that was the only time they could find to settle down with their favourite show.

Researchers also found 71 per cent of streaming fans said it's important for them to keep up to date with their favourite TV shows.

And three quarters said they feel under pressure to stream on the go to avoid hearing any unwanted spoilers if they leave it to catch up later.

As a result, three in 10 regularly stream while on holiday, with one in 10 even catching up on the beach.

Sky launches new service that could change the way you watch TV

March 9, 2019

Most Sky customers will be well aware of the firm's smartphone apps.

Services such as Sky Go allow users to watch all of the firm's content whilst on the move with sports and entertainment all available when away from your main set-top box.

These apps are hugely popular but there is a problem if you use them when not connected to Wi-Fi as they can consume a huge amount of 4G data.

For example, watching an entire F1 race will munch through around 2.9GB of your

The biggest drain to your monthly data limit on a phone contract is always the streaming, but luckily for Sky Mobile users that may not be such a problem any more.

As of today, Sky Mobile is launching a new Sky Watch proposition, offering up unlimited streaming away from Wi-Fi on all of its apps (such as Sky Go) without using any of your data. That means hours (and hours) of data-free Sky Sports, Sky Kids, Sky Cinema and all of the other movie and TV services it has.

Watch will be available to all Sky Mobile customers, although what you can stream depends on what you are already subscribed to. If you don't have any Sky TV subscriptions, you won't suddenly be able to watch that. But you will still have access to free streaming of services such as Sky News or the classic Freeview channels.

Unlimited streaming and social media: the UK's best free data schemes

We rank the UK mobile networks offering free data for streaming or using social media as much as you like, to find which is best. SIM Sherpa is your trusty guide. Last updated: 8th March 2019

Free streaming data and social media explained

Some networks have stopped charging for some data usage

Mobile networks are forever trying to find more and more clever ways to lure in new customers. And they know that one of the things we're most concerned about is how much data we use. And what that costs.

So a few of them have changed the way their deals work, so that some of the activities you do on your phone no longer eat into your main data allowance.

Not many providers are doing this yet. But the ones that do, tend to let you do either of the following as much as you like:

- 1 Streaming video and music
- 2 Social media and messaging apps

In this guide, we compare each network's scheme and look for any potential restrictions and catches.

✓ It's like turning off the meter in a taxi

Free video and music streaming data schemes

Free streaming data is the most valuable type of scheme

Most people know from experience that watching video is one of the most data-hungry activities we do on our phones. We estimate an hour of video on your phone in standard definition uses up 1GB of data.

Music and audio streaming can also use a fair chunk. We'd estimate an hour of music uses 70MB, which can quickly add up over the course of a month. Both estimates vary depending

Sky Mobile通过Watch推出无限量流媒体服务

来源：《广播与电视技术》 时间：03月13日 10:39 阅读：63 [国际动态]

摘要： Sky Mobile充分利用其母公司的内容整合，宣布推出新版Watch服务，为用户提供无限量流媒体服务，而且无需使用用户的数据限额。

Sky Mobile充分利用其母公司的内容整合，宣布推出新版Watch服务，为用户提供无限量流媒体服务，而且无需使用用户的数据限额。

所有Sky Mobile用户都可以使用Watch服务，不过访问权限将取决于个人订阅的Sky TV。其他功能还包括Roll，这是英国首个面向所有用户的数据结转服务，所有未使用的月度数据流量都会自动结转，在三年内均可使用。

Sky Mobile主管索菲亚·艾哈迈德表示：“我们推出了Sky Mobile，是为了将我们的用户与他们喜爱的东西联系起来。现在通过流媒体观看电影和电视节目已经是旅行或上下班途中度过时光最流行的方式之一。我们了解用户的喜好，因此新Watch服务让我们的用户更容易跟上从《权力的游戏》到一级方程式比赛等不容错过的必看节目的最新动向。”

Sky Mobile's new Watch offer lets you stream Sky content without wasting data

The biggest drain to your monthly data limit on a phone contract is always the streaming, but luckily for Sky Mobile users that may not be such a problem any more.

As of today, Sky Mobile is launching a new Sky Watch proposition, offering up unlimited streaming away from Wi-Fi on all of its apps (such as Sky Go) without using any of your data. That means hours (and hours) of data-free Sky Sports, Sky Kids, Sky Cinema and all of the other movie and TV services it has.

Watch will be available to all Sky Mobile customers, although what you can stream depends on what you are already subscribed to. If you don't have any Sky TV subscriptions, you won't suddenly be able to watch that. But you will still have access to free streaming of services such as Sky News or the classic Freeview channels.

Sophia Ahmad, Director of Sky Mobile, said: "Streaming films and TV shows on-the-go is now one of the most popular ways to pass time while travelling or commuting – and our new Watch offer makes it easier for our customers to stay up to date with the unmissable must-watch television."

This service is coming just at the right time to watch new episodes of Game of Thrones, catch the end of the Premier League season or just watch the latest and greatest films on Sky Cinema.

Head to Sky Mobile to discover more about this offer and grab a Sky mobile phone deal.

Rumer - Boys Don't Cry

Sky Mobile has announced a new streaming feature for its customers that means they can watch content on their phones without affecting their data allowance.

It's called Watch and it applies to all the Sky apps, including Sky Sports, Sky News, Sky Go and Sky Q.

If you're a subscriber and a Sky Mobile customer you can enjoy an entire football match or episode of Game of Thrones without affecting your bill. That's pretty useful – especially if you're locked in to Sky's £6 a month plan, which only affords you 1GB of data.
